

Cable providers as a group have a clear history of abusing their market monopolies and have done nothing to warrant any public trust that they will act responsibly with a new market monopoly on one of the two viable technologies for broadband internet access.